Mondale Consulting Jews on Jackson

By Bernard Weinraub New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Walter F. Mondale's campaign organization, concerned about a potential shift of Jewish votes to President Ronald Reagan in the November election because of strains over the candidacy of the Rev. Jesse L. Jackson, has quietly begun conferring with a wide range of Jewish leaders on the former vice president's present and future dealings with Mr. Jackson. According to campaign officials, the effort is being conducted by Robert G. Beckel, the Mondale campaign manager, and David If-shin, its general counsel. They have been making telephone calls to Jewish officials, holding private meetings with them and writing to them. They have expressed assur-ances that the Mondale campaign's dealings and negotiations with Mr. Jackson would not "compromise" Mr. Mondale on such issues as Middle East policy, the officials said. Court's Seniority Ruling Leaves Many Questions Affirmative Action Programs in U.S.

By Linda Greenhouse New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — In case after case over the last decade, the Supreme Court has walked gingerly through the minefield of affirmative action, the policy of giving job preference to minority groups.

The court's decision Tuesday in the case of black Memphis fire fighters, in which it struck the balance between seniority rights and affirmative action in favor of seniority, was no different. The 6-3 ruling answered one question: whether federal law authorizes a judge to modify an em-ployer's valid "last hired, first fired" seniority plan in order to protect recently hired black em-ployees against layoffs. The answer, to the satisfaction of the Reagan administration, was no.

But although the administration officials hailed the decision as the definitive victory they have been waiting for in their war against affirmative action programs, the court left a number of crucial ques-

For example, could an employer, in the absence of a court order, voluntarily modify its seniority system in order to protect recent job gains for blacks? That is "an issue we need not decide," Associate Justice Byron R. White wrote in the majority opinion.

In the court's view, the lower courts had erroneously awarded retroactive seniority to the black fire fighters. Retroactive seniority, Justice White said, is a remedy available only to individual plain-tiffs who can show that they personally were victims of discrimination. But are racially based preferences in hiring and promotion, which form the heart of most affirmative action plans and which are not limited to victims of discrimination, subject to a similar. limitation?

The court did not say. The majority opinion did emphasize a favorite Reagan administration theme: that federal law does not permit a blanket preference for one racial group at the expense of another and that, in Justice White's words, "mere membership in the disadvantaged class" cannot justify "make-whole relief" for a plaintiff who did not personally suffer dis-

But most of the court's discussion of this came in the context of ment as an effort to extract maxiseniority systems. Congress gave mum political capital from the explicit protection to seniority sys- decision.

tems under the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the principle federal law against job discrimination, and the court has said again and again that only proved victims of discrimination are entitled to displace "innocent" employees on the seniority

To the extent that the case decided Tuesday, Fire fighters vs. Stotts. simply applied those rulings to a case with a novel twist, the decision contained little that was surprising. But some of the court's language was particularly dense and ambiguous, and the tone was one of distaste for broad judicial remedies on behalf of "nonvictims."

The extent to which the decision goes beyond seniority to limit class-wide remedies for hiring and promotion depends on how courts use example, in a concurring opinion, Associate Justice Sandra Day O'Connor wrole that a court may use its remedial powers "only to prevent future violations and to unlawful discrimination."

While the second part of that phrase is clear, the first is far from t. Most affirmative action plans incorporate broad hiring and pro-motion goals primarily to prevent violations, on the premise that an employer who hires in rough proportion to the availability of minority group members or women is probably not going to be engaging in raw discrimination. Justice O'Connor's language can arguably be used by either side in the debate over the decision's meaning.

William B. Reynolds, the assistant attorney general for civil rights, said Wednesday that in his view the opinion applied to hiring and promotion "to the same extent" it applied to layoffs and that, as a result, courts do not have au-thority to order "relief of a raceconscious nature that advantages

He said the Justice Department would "take a hard look" at whether existing consent decrees contained "quotas or quota-based re-lief" that should be modified.

Mr. Reynolds, who has led the administration's legal effort against affirmative action plans, said the decision was "a monumen-tal triumph for civil rights" that took the "principled road of race

Swiss Theologians Criticize Vatican

By Henry Kamm New York Times Service

FRIBOURG, Switzerland -After meeting with Pope John Paul II here, a group of Roman Catholic academic officials and theologians in Switzerland has issued a statement containing unusual open criticism of Vatican policy, condemning what they called "unfavorable results of Roman centralism." Their complaint Wednesday to the pope, who is visiting Switzerland, was against the Vatican's insistence that teaching appointments to their institutions must be approved by Rome and against what they called "all-toorestrictive uniform rules of seminary procedures." The officials said this was harmful to the authority of local churches,

Earlier, the group of rectors. theology deans and leading theology professors from Catholic faculties around Switzerland met privately with the pope at Fri-bourg University.

The meeting was one of sever-al with academic and youth groups during a day in which the pope, in a relaxed and talkative mood, improvised speeches and joked with his listeners.

But the pope also heard criticisms, implied more often than open, of church positions. John Paul gave indirect replies at best to the criticisms and left most

Resolved: A Hope for Greater European Unity

By Bob Hagerty

onal Herald Tribune CAMBRIDGE, England -Most of Britain was "ablaze with indifference" on the eve of the elections for the European Parliament, as one television announcer put it.

But at Cambridge University on Wednesday evening emotions were high as the Union Society debated whether "this house has faith in the European Economic Community and hopes for greater European unity." When it was all over but the drinking, the society voted 120-77 in favor of the proposition.

The debate, sponsored by the ternational Herald Tribune, came before Thursday's voting in Britain, Ireland, Denmark and the Netherlands. The other six member countries will vote Sunday, and no results from any of the countries will be announced Britain, which joined the EC in 1973, 16 years after it was formed, has always had distinctly mixed feelings about the commu-nity. Soviet Curbs Contacts With Foreigners

By Robert Gillette Los Angeles Times Service

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union has adopted a law that puts its citizens at risk of punishment for giving shelter, transportation or other "services" to foreigners with-.... out official permission.

The new law is the third modification of the legal code this year that is apparently designed to further restrict contacts between Soviet citizens and foreigners who live , or travel in the country.

The vaguely worded law, which takes effect July 1, could be broadly construed to mean that any Sovi-et citizen who gives a foreigner a ride in his car or puts him up in his apartment overnight runs the risk of a fine ranging from 10 to 50 rubles ($13 to $65), a "warning" appears to be striving to seal itself off more and more tightly from the

Drug Is Said to Lessen Effects of Herpes

By Philip M. Boffey New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Scientists have announced the first successful treatment to suppress or prevent recurring attacks of genital herpes in people infected with the sexually transmitted disease. The scientists said Wednesday that the new experimental treatment, involving daily oral doses of the drug acyclovir, could end the physical and emotional trauma experienced by the most severely affected herpes victims. The drug is manufactured by the Burroughs Wellcome Company and is sold under the name Zovirax.

The scientists also speculated that treatments might réduce the risk of herpes victims spreading the disease to sexual partners.

"This is not a cure; we are far from a cure," Dr. Stephen E. Straus, head of the medical virology section at the National Institute of Allergy and infectious Diseases, said at a news conference Wednesday. "But we have had nothing in the past, nothing at all, that has been able to do what we have ac-

Genital herpes has afflicted perhaps 10 percent of the American population, or some 20 million people, and it is making another 300,000 to 500,000 victims each year, Dr. Straus said.

Most suffer small, painful geni tal blisters, often accompanied by swelling and flu-like symptoms. The initial symptoms generally dis appear within three weeks, and the beroes virus retreats into the nerve roots to re-emerge periodically to cause other flare-ups.

Again, the Bulgarians

In the three years since a Turkish terrorist shot Pope John Paul II in St. Peter's Square, it has frequently been alleged that the gunman had been hired by the Bulgarian secret police, presumably at Soviet bidding, to kill the pope for inspiring the Solidarity movement in Po-land. But while there was some evidence and some political basis for this theory, there has not been hard, corroborated evidence in the necessary quality and quantity. As a result, many people have felt that it was unwarranted and perhaps even irresponsible to drag in the name of the Soviet Union.

Hence the importance of Claire Sterling's story in The New York Times. An independent Rome-based writer who has written extensively about this case, Mrs. Sterling drew from the secret 78-page report on the attempted assassination filed in a Rome court on May 8 by the state prosecutor, Antonio Albano. His report is based on the 25,000 pages of documentation collected by Judge Ilario Martella, who earlier bad convicted Mehmet Ali Agca in the shooting and who will soon be ruling on whether there will be further trials.

The Albano report is the most authoritative available. Point by point, the prosecutor corroborates the story the gunman told Italian authorities after he decided that his handlers had abandoned him to a life sentence. Although some of his statements were "unverifiable because of insurmountable difficulties in the investigation," Mr. Albano wrote, "only two elements could be proved to be untrue" they concerned the height of one Bulgarian contact and the identity of another. Everything else that could be checked confirmed the Bulgarian connection. Mr. Albano now recommends the indictment of three Bulgarians and five additional Turks on conspiracy charges.

From the beginning there has been no proof of a Soviet hand, only the not unreasonable surmise that Bulgaria, so long and so deeply subservient to Moscow, could not have acted on its own in a matter so momentous. There is no proof now. Mr. Albano's demonstration of the Bulgarian connection, however, undoubtedly sharpens the question of what Soviet role can be inferred from it. His own view is that the rise of Solidarity created "a most acute crisis for the socialist states of Eastern Europe. ... In some secret place, where every secret is wrapped in another secret, some political figure of great power took note of this most grave situation and, mindful of the vital needs of the Eastern bloc, decided it was necessary to kill Pope Wojtyla" — the pontiff's Polish name.

A Troubling Decision

The Reagan administration has struggled ceaselessly to divert the nation from its 20-year commitment to affirmative action in the hiring of previously excluded minorities. Lamentably, it has started to gain some ground in the courts - notably in the Supreme Court's ruling in the case of the Memphis firefighters. In a 6-3 decision Tuesday, the justices bent over backward to hand the Reagan administration a victory, first because the court took the case at all and second because of the content of its decision.

The case raised one of the most troubling civil rights conflicts: What should cities do in times of fiscal austerity when white workers want to keep their jobs and minority workers want to protect hiring and promotion gains made through affirmative action? In a conflict between an established seniority program and affirmative action the court has previously. accorded seniority a position of almost sacred trust. By reiterating that principle in this marginal case, it throws needless doubt on the egitimacy of broad-based affirmative action.

The city of Memphis has a poor record for hiring minorities in city agencies. In 1980, after black firefighters sued, charging discrimina-tion in hiring and promotions, the city entered into a consent agreement without admitting any wrongdoing. The agreement obliged the city to "raise the black representation" in the fire department to about 35 percent, reflecting the black proportion of the civilian work force.

But in 1981, when still less than 12 percent of firefighters were black, financial problems forced the city to lay off workers. Ultimately, 24 firefighters - 21 white and 3 black - were laid off. The union's strict seniority rule of "last hired, first fired," was of little consequence, since all 24 had been hired on the same day. Thus the layoffs were not actually determined by seniority but alphabetically. If the system had been followed strictly, three more black firemen would have been laid off and three fewer whites (the three extra whites temporarily displaced were rehired in a month). Was the action on behalf of the three blacks not laid off defensible? Yes, said two lower courts. No, said the Supreme Court. Given that the three whites were rehired so soon, the court could easily have refused to accept the case and declared it legally dead. But it took the case nonetheless, and has now offered up

It held that federal courts are not free to interfere with legitimate seniority plans as long as they were not designed to discriminate. Writing for the majority, Justice Byron White said, "The [Civil Rights] Act protects bona fide seniority systems, and it is inappropriate to deny an innocent employee the benefits of his seniority in order to provide a remedy."

That is fine only as far as it goes. In the civil rights arena, such hard-edged interpretations are not so easy. Are whites who secured jobs, at least in part because of discrimination against minorities and women, invariably "innocent"? Why are only those minorities and women who were specific victims of discrimination eligible for remedial action? The court was quick to reach out to decide this case, but reluctant to grapple with its broader issues.

The decision does not mean the death of affirmative action. But in the absence of broader interpretation from the court, the administration is rushing to examine hundreds of past affirmative action settlements with the idea of reopening them. That can only lead to more confusion and litigation. For a court that has endorsed class-based affirmative action, the decision marks a troublesome retreat.

Other Opinion

Spectacular, but a Success?

The successful interception in flight of one American military ballistic missile by another is a spectacular example of the kind of feat that can be brought off by high-tech wizardry. But it will do nothing to justify the pursuit of a military strategy based on ballistic missile de-fense, to which the Reagan administration seems profoundly committed, but which remains as dangerous as ever. The pursuit of a strategy based on ballistic missile defense, just because an emotional hunch says it ought to be plausible, is dangerous because it risks destabilizing the nuclear balance.

Tracing the Roots of Hunger

From every angle — cost-effectiveness, political and social stability, self-interest, humanitarian concern — the case for a massive mobilization of resources to tackle the global problem of desertification appears overwhelming. The livelihoods of 850 million people are directly threatened.

Sand-dune encroachment is only a minor part of the problem. Sometimes thousands of kilometers from the margins of the Sahara, Gobi, Atacama and other deserts, desertification is taking place. The situation has been accurately likened to a skin disease in which existing eruptions worsen and coalesce with new outbreaks of the disease.

The consequences of environmental despoilation are helping to destabilize nations. Desertification and the other threats to the planet's life support systems are causing social and political breakdowns. Descrification results not only in the loss of nations' productive resource base but also in the loss of valuable genetic resources, increase in atmospheric dust, and disruption of natural water recycling processes.

– Mostafa Tolba, executive director of the United Nations Environment Program.

The United States is sending emergency food aid for drought-stricken areas in Zimbabwe. The situation is worse in neighboring Mozambique, where death from starvation is said to have reached an extraordinary magnitude. South Africa will actually need to import grain just to satisfy domestic demands. To the north nearly a dozen Sahel countries bordering the Sahara are near to catastrophe. Tens of thousands of people have already died.

But Africa's climate is not alone responsible for the desperate situation. Unworkable policies, especially involving pricing and marketing inefficiency and corruption, plus overval-ued currencies, have all played a part in the decline in per capita agricultural production.

1909: A Moderate' $40,000 Dress Bill NEW YORK -- Mrs. Howard Gould was subjected to more grilling [on June 14] in the Supreme Court at the hands of her husband's attorney, Mr. De Lancey Nicoll, who sought to show up her extravagances. She admitted that when she and her husband passed the winter of 1905 in Florida, she had about a hundred exquisite dresses. The witness declared that a woman's outfit worn once was useless afterwards. "What did you do with all these dresses after wearing them once?" queried Mr. De Lancey Nicoll. The witness replied: "I generally gave them away. If I'm not mistaken I gave one of them to your sister when she was on the stage." Mrs. Gould said that before she and her husband parted, her yearly dress bill amounted to $40,000, which she considered moderate for the wife of a multi-millionaire.

1934: Baer Takes Heavyweight Title NEW YORK - Forced to ask for mercy from Referee Arthur Donovan after receiving terrific punishment in the tenth and eleventh rounds, Primo Carnera, world's heaviest heavyweight, lost his world crown at Madison Square Garden Bowl (on June 14), with Max Baer, of California, as the newly crowned king of the ring. After 2 minutes, 13 seconds of fighting in the eleventh round the giant Italian turned to Donovan and muttered, "I've had enough." Baer, grinning, turned to the crowd and accepted applause quite as though he had known for many days that the title was about to become his. Round eleven went like this:

Baer started cautiously. Carnera stumbled and then Baer floored him with a long right. Baer then knocked down the champion twice. Carnera asked the referee to stop the fight.

Two Obstacles on the Narrow Path to Arms Control

WASHINGTON — At times American politics resembles one of those circus dolls weighted at the bottom. Hit it to the left and it returns to the center. Hit it to the right and it returns to the center. Walter Lippmann, using a different image, used to write of the suction of the center. This impulse to stay on course obviously has served to stabilize the American ship of state over the decades. The U.S. political system traditionally has not allowed anyone in the White House to shift the country too far off its traditional course.

There are times, however, in any country's history when a sharp shift in direction is required. A ship sailing straight ahead can hit the rocks just as easily as one veering suddenly to the right or the left.

And in the field of arms control the United States is indeed headed straight for the rocks. The Reagan administration will probably be the last able to engage in the process of arms control as we have known it. What will replace this process no one knows, but a group of eminent British diplomats and generals were probably right when they voiced their concern recently about an "age of world anarchy."

There are two reasons for the danger of a policy collision in the field of arms control. The first is the growing danger that the international community will lose the political capability to negotiate arms-control agreements. The sec-ond is that it will lose the technical capability to verify these agreements.

The political danger is less well understood than the technical one. Arms controllers have long known that it is easier to negotiate armscontrol agreements between two powers than three or more. A world dominated by superpowers, in other words, is easier to manage than one with several powers; for when only two are negotiating, it is possible to reach agreements based on parity at any point.

By Charles William Maynes

in the negotiations, the international community faces the kind of problems that stymied the for the Soviet Union." great powers in the period between world wars. Then, Japan's emerging navy posed a danger to other powers. At the 1921-22 Washington con-ference on naval issues, Japan demanded naval forces equal to those that others might deploy in waters of interest to Japan. The other naval powers worried that such a level would give Japan superiority. In the end Japanese officials accepted a lower level, only to renounce these restraints in the mid-1930s and prepare the way for the attack on Pearl Harbor.

Leonid Brezhnev is alleged to have said before his death that all the nuclear weapons in the world were either in the Soviet Union or targeted against it. The persistent Soviet call for equal security, which the Kremlin has raised in all arms-control negotiations, is nothing other than the earlier Japanese position transposed to a thermonuclear setting.

The Soviet Union argues that it is reasonable for it to have nuclear forces equal to those of all of its potential (nuclear) enemies — the United States, Britain, France and China. The United States, Britain, France and China. The United States rejects this position because the result would be to grant the Soviet Union the right to acquire more nuclear weapons than the United States could acquire. Indeed, the 1972 Jackson amendment calls upon the president in any future treaty on offensive weapons not to limit ber of nuclear warheads that they can rain on their enemies' territory from 300 to as many as 1,200. At the end of this process a single British or French submarine commander will have power denied even Hider. At one command, provided his crew will follow orders, he can liminate the Soviet Union as a great power. As Jonathan Alford, a retired British colonel and now deputy director of the International Institute for Strategic Studies, has pointed out, British and French nuclear forces now "seem to be developing to a point well beyond that which was previously regarded as a minimum deter-rent level."

Once that point is reached, the world will face a structural problem in the field of areas control it has not encountered since the beginning of the superpower era. Arms control will be impossible unless one of the superpowers accepts an agreement that forces it into a position of inferiority vis-it-vis the other superpow er. It seems safe to say that such an agreement cannot be negotiated, or if negotiated, cannot be ratified either in Washington or Moscow. The other looming danger for arms control is technological. In the past, arms control has depended upon the technical ability of the negotiating parties to verify the agreements signed. But the emergence of so-called "idw observables" close to the earth's surface and "Star Wars" technology high above it may deny the world this confidence in the ability to verify. Consider the impact of the cruise missile, a product of miniaturization. Small, easily concealed, cheap and highly accurate, the croise missile can overwhelm the defenses of even the most carefully prepared opponent. Its extraordinary accuracy will arouse mounting fears on both sides of a decapitation attack.

Once proven, the cruise missile will be de-ployed by the thousands. Any hope of verifica-tion will end in the face of the sheer magnitude of the task. Meanwhile, space technology may threaten the security of the verification satellites that made it possible for the superpowers to reach the Anti-Ballistic Missile and Strategic to reach the Anti-Bainshe Missile and Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty agreements. None of these issues is being discussed ade-quately. The Reagan administration and the Congress are confusing and frightening the public with charge and countercharge and with a basketful of proposals — build-down, deep cuts, freeze, moratorium. Some of the proposals are good and some are bad, but none of them is likely to stop the world from taking the steps that will spell the end of arms control. In the end, the current political campaign is likely to push the United States back again to the center. But this time that may not be the place to be.

Preparing to Commemorate Victory

PARIS — The D-Day ceremonies in Normandy stirred more than pride and patriotism. It is not too early to take account of the emotions and misunderstandings that surfaced in order to plan suitable commemoration of next year's 40th anniversary of the end of World War II.

As it happened, leaders of the three former Axis powers met, immediately after the celebration, with the Western leaders of the wartime Alliance at the London summit conference.

Even without West German grumbling, carefully not echoed by Italy or Japan, it was a sharp reminder of how drastically the world's power alignment has changed in barely two gen-erations. Moscow, now the adversary, underlined the point by reviving old Cold War claims that the West did not really help and that the Russians were responsible for victory over Nazi Germany. In the current climate, it stretches the imagination to think children now alive might see a day when the United States and the Soviet Union would again be friends and partners in a common cause. But then on D-Day, 1944, few would have predicted the shifts that have taken place. That would be a humbling reminder of the transience of power rivalries, just as V-E day and V-I day next year should be reminders of the terrible toll of war — even when one side could still defeat the other. Britain's Lord Carrington, soon to become secretary-general of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, spoke aptly of the potency of remembrance as a deterrent.

He landed in Normandy in the midst of furious battle on D-Day plus eight. "I don't think the Russians want war any more than we do," he said last week. "Nobody who fought in any war wants another."

Peace, not victory, should be the theme when the time comes to honor the dates of surrender, May 8 in Europe and Aug. 14 in Japan. They were victories and the aftermath changed the world in unpredictable ways. But their most important meaning was the folly of dreams to dominate or control the world, on earth or, as some adults who should know better now fancy, from space.

When it comes to the end of the war, memory should stress not tri-umph but sacrifice and World War II's awesome and irreversible introduction of the atomic age. '.

Therefore, all participants in the war have a claim to join in celebrating its ending: ex-enemies who are now allies and ex-allies now considered foes. It can be a way of reversing the profound chill that has overtaken East-West relations and refreshing the sense that the living must share this planet whatever their quarrels.

Such a plan is something to talk to Moscow about soon, despite its refusal to continue nuclear arms negotiations. In this way, an East-West summit session would be possible early in the next presidential term without a loss of face for either side and without the improbable condition of "careful preparations" that would guarantee agreements.

The Kremlin takes deeply seriously world recognition that the outcome of World War II, particularly with regard to Germany, is not to be challenged. That was its major motive in promoting the Helsinki accords of 1975. There is still no peace treaty By Flora Lewis with Germany. Nor, for that matter, is there a Soviet-Japanese peace treaty, because of Moscow's refusal to return four northern islands.

The reaction to the Normandy events in West Germany shows that the implications have faded, particularly among the young. The New York Times's Bonn correspondent, James Markham, quoted Walther Grunwald a Greens activist in West Berlin, saying that Germany's exclusion left the "impression that this was son let the impression that this was a war not only against Fascism, but against Germany." Deputy Foreign Minister Alois Mertes warned of alienating democratic West Germans if a feeling is created among Germans that they were a vanquished people or a nation of gmity men be-tween East and West."

Indeed, the war was to defeat Fascists, but the Nazis fought in the name of the whole German nation.

feat. If they ignore that, they cannot understand the present or cope with the key point. It was Manfred Rommel, mayor of Stuttgart and son of Erwin Rommel, the "desert fox." He said, "It was better to lose the war with Hitler than to win it with Hitler. This is a bitter idea but a necessary idea." Germans, Russians and others. should be told now they will be welcome to join in V-E and V-J day ceremonies in 1985 dedicated to the idea that war must be prevented. The New York Times

You Need a Long Memory By Richard Critchfield C AIRO — Though plagued by tility it has. In addition, while seeds can survive in the descrit for 100

In Africa, Land of Youth, lion, Africans display a peculiar half-tamed energy and vitality that speaks of an exciting future. They are the oldest people on the planet, yet their average age is very young. Fully 45 percent of all Africans are under 15, compared with less than a third of the rest of us. Yet in Africa you need a long memory to explain the present.

Take the drought, the worst in living memory, and the widening gap between food production (increasing at 1.3 percent a year) and population (growing by 3 percent). On a 5,000-mile (8,000-kilometer) journey through Mauritania, Senegal and Mali in April, I found Africa's main problem at every turn: the blowing red dust of weak soil. This soil, scientists say, is the reason why the breakthroughs in tropical-plant genetics that have rescued much of the Third World from hunger have not yet taken hold in Africa.

What is different? For much of the lend with its thorny bush, baobab and acacia trees became the characteristic landscape of Africa's east and the future. One German voice made south, then as now. In this savannah, primitive man evolved from apes and learned to make fire, shape flint tools and probably talk. By the time the Ice Age reached its peak, modern man, after presumably breaking through the Saharan barrier by moving down the Nile Valley, had spread through Europe and Asia. Never emiched by glaciers, and leached of its materials by irregular rains, African soil does not hold water, is not easily fertilized and, if worked too intensely, loses what fer-can survive in the desert for 100 years, human society is more fragile. Unless rains return to the Sahara borderlands, nomadism in the Sahel may face extinction. "Our civilization is dying, "says Ba Aliou Hora, secretary of Mauritania's ruling military com-mittee. Mauritania's Moors, like the Toareg of Mali and Niger, have lost at least half their livestock, after painfully building their numbers up since the disastrous drought in 1973. Much of the Sahel has become a semidesert of failed crops, lost berds and abandoned villages. At the dwin-dling number of water holes, tens of thousands of starving cattle jostle for a drink; along the roads are the bleached bones and mummified corpses of thousands more.

But the full extent of the tragedy is understood only when one goes back to the transition from food gathering to food production in the Near East during the Stone Age. Africa re-mained maffected, its people sub-sisting entirely by hunting, fishing sponsibility for the horrible heritage.

In any case, it is bad for young Germans to harbor false impressions. The continued partition of Germany was the direct result of national design of the continued partition of Germany was the direct result of national design. a rapid rise in the number of herdsmen, who drove cattle, sheep and goats to different pastures at different seasons, across the Sahel from the Sudan to Mauritania. Incredibly, ancient farming techniques — cow drawn water winels, threshing sledges, sickles and short-handled hoes — lasted through the 1960s. As a result of the completion of the Aswan Dam in 1971, the electrification of Egypt's 4,000 villages and the introduction of diesel pumps, tractors and farm machinery, technology that last-ed 6,000 years is vanishing.

And in the Sudan, the Sudd swamp, a huge sea of papyrus ferns, crocodiles and rotting ooze, for years helped insulate and preserve a Neolithic form of pastoral life among the Nuer and Dinka tribes, which are believed to have prevailed along the entire Nile Valley 17,000 to 7,900 years ago. Only since 1978, with the excavation of the Jonglei Catali, American oil discoveries and civil American oil discoveries and civil war, is a way of life ending that probably has survived longer than aliy other on this planet.

Students at Lawrence University, with the underdeveloped appreciation of blessings for which undergraduates are notorious, say that Houdini's greatest escape was from Appleton.

On a bluff above the river, beneath a dark tombstone, rest the remains of another native son. Senator Joseph McCarthy did not live nobly enough to earn such a lovely place of repose. Thirty years ago this month his political death was assured. He was losing his confrontation with the army, a Jr., with fresh evidence, in a new book, "Who Killed Joe McCarthy!" Most Americans are, like this writer, too young to remember the waves of emotion surrounding Mr. McCar thy. Mr. Ewald's book prompts this question about the senator: How could a charlatan so frivolous, served by staff members so reckless, have prospered as long as he did? Considerable blame has fallen upon Eisenhower's perceived passivity.

However, upward revisions of Eisenhower's reputation continue to leak out of the crevices of scholarship, and Mr. Ewald, who served on Eisenhower's White House staff, is part of that process. Mr. Ewald's contention, persuasively argued, is that Eisenhower was a passionate and enileful participant in bringing down Mr. McCarthy, but his tactic was heroic reticence.

It reveals something of hysteria but even more of the nation's relative immaturity - relative to today that the nation was mesmerized by the question, "Who promoted Peress?" Major Peress, an army dentist, was what Mr. McCarthy called a "Fifth Amendment Communist." He refused to sign a loyalty oath. He was promoted by the routine working of the draft law as applied to doctors.

Many Democrats were content to see Mr. McCarthy's rampage prolonged because they, like Eisenhower, saw it as, at least in part, an intramural Republican war. Mr. Mo-

Carthy attacked George Marshall, who had raised Eisenhower to glory, and then attacked the army. Eisen-hower considered Mr. McCarthy an instrument used by bitter Taft Republicans determined to destroy him.

Mr. McCarthy was bewildering and not only to Eisenhower, because he was utterly indifferent to the truth.

This gave his behavior an aspect of nness that made it hard to anticinate, and hence to combat, Eisenhower's initial strategy was to ignore Mr. McCarthy. He thought that Harry Truman and others had inflated Mr. McCarthy by attacking him. But Eisenhower's public passivity did not deflate Mr. McCarthy. In the forthcoming second volume of his excellent biography of Eisenhower, Stephen Ambrose notes that the key to the McCarthy circus was the power to subpoens witnesses. Eisenhower drew the right line in the dust when he invoked — indeed, almost invented in its current form the doctrine of executive privilege. allow his extremism, conveyed to the country by the novelty of television, to undo him. This it had done by June 17, 1954, when the army-McCarthy arings ended. A year and a half after Eisenhower took office, Mr. McCarthy was finished. Mr. Ewald's book draws upon the transcripts of surreptitiously moni-tored telephone conversations. Something that is ethically dubious can be good for the history books. In fact, Mr. McCarthy did far fewer and less-lasting injuries to academic freedom and other rights of expression than was done in the name of love and peace by the left in the late 1960s and early 1970s, when militant minorities vetoed speakers and closed campuses

ASHINGTON - It seizes you right there on the sidewalk, waiting for the bank-card machine. You've pocketed your money, but the little printer gizmo is still natter-ing away like a garbage disposal full of paper clips. Meeting with Benson in 20 minutes; better buy flowers for Susie. You shift your feet. Really gotta call Dix about the Feinberg account; need a haircut; that memo's due by 5. The machine is still grinding.

And suddenly a giant punch to the chest. The receipt is printing out too slowly. In less than a second, your arteries bulge, your vision thrus to stipples and your innards are in a rage.

Liris to stipples and your innards are in a rage.

Liris the dread new malady of the Silicon Decade, a neuro-trauma that strikes when the world is running slower than we are. And

'thanks to mankind's adaptability, we're already moving at full speed in response to a frantic sensory onslaught of beeper paging, sign-and-run credit cards, alarm watches, electronic mail, rapid transit, hand calculators, microwaved pouch food, predatory job swaps and no-fault car crashes and divorces. Not to mention video games and computers everywhere.

It's life in Fast-Forward Mode, where it absolutely, positively has It's life in Past-Porward Mode, where it absolutely, positively has to be thin thighs in 30 days but there isn't even time for the 20-minute workout. Like some vast hatchery of Skinnerian chickens, we are trained to peck faster and faster in our direct-dial, one-step, pop-top, nonstop world. (Batteries not included.)

No wonder Dr. Mardi J. Horowitz, director of the Center for the nonstop world. (Batteries not instance)

No wonder Dr. Mardi J. Horowitz, director of the Center for the Study of Neuroses at the University of California, San Francisco, thinks it is possible that Americans are approaching "national overload."

As it is explained at Horowitz's clinic for stress and anxiety disorders: "When a person is presented with a stimulus, especially one that is jangling in some way, a series of conceptual and emotional processes are set in motion" at both the conscious and much multiple channels of consideration."

Ideally, each of these channels should flow smoothly to completion. But when the next jangle comes too soon, the flow is blocked. "Some experiences are bumped out of the storage line. Some just remain because they are important and stressful, but they remain in an incomplete mode of processing."

. As a result, people "have larger and larger loads of unfinished husiness. When this gets too great, it begins to affect their subjective experience, interrupting concentration with intrusive images, their experience, with anxious wakefulness or troubled dreams, and their capacity to love and enjoy experience with an impatient restlessness to go on superficially to still the next thing." Attention wavers, then snaps; thoughts ricochet across the brain pan; blood pressure shoots up.

All this in only 30 years.

It is virtually unthinkable now, but there was once a time when families would turn on the television and wait entire minutes in voluptuous anticipation for the set to "warm up." When bank clients conducted their transactions with a bona fide human being and roadside hamburgers were produced to order by cooks with cheap tattoos and packs of Luckies rolled up in their T-shirt sleeves.

Of course, we were speeding even then. As late as the early '60s, most Americans still shared the Myth of the Automated Manāna:

The evolution of technology, with its proliferation of "labor-saving devices" would banish drudgery, ushering in a lifetime of creative leisure. Words like "frost-free" and "timed bake" conjured a Dagwood daydream of hammocks.

in It was not to be. Instead, as the clapsed time for each event decreased, we simply crammed more events into the same space. And in 1984 we are living in a society in which the phone company can fire an operator for staying on the line too long with customers, and one fast-food chain promises a reward to those not served (if that's the word) within a minute.

time, eating to stay thin and be chic gets boring as hell."

Before opening his Tony Roma's A Place for Ribs at 46 St. Martin's Lane late this month, Roma is easing the ennui of chic and mostly thin Londoners with a series of preview parties to which the likes of Jackie Collins, Michael Caine, Elton John, Paul McCartney and Lady ("Bubbles") Rothermere have been bidden to drink Piña Coladas and let barbecue sauce dribble freely down their chins.

Roma's first Place for Ribs opened in Florida 12 years ago. Now there are 39 — he can't quite keep track of the openings — but London marks his first stab at Europe.

He has plans for Paris, Copenhagen, Rome, Hong Kong, Singapore. There are already four Tony Romas in Japan. "You know, when I first went there it was an education process," Roma said over a mid-afternoon scotch. "They were actually pick-ing up the bones with chopsticks. I would actually go to a person, one after the other, and take the chopsticks away."

The average Roma customer uses 4 or 5 paper napkins when downing a slab of 10 to 12 barbecued ribs. They are baby back ribs from young hogs and in the United States alone, Roma's restaurants sell 100,000 sounds (more than 45,000 kilos) a week.

Roma is not the first American to bring ribs to Loudon: The pioneer was an advertising man named Bob Payton who went on to pizzas and to the quaintly named Henry J. Bean's (But His Friends All Call Him Hank) Bar and Grill. Payton's success, says Roma, is due to brilliant marketing and to London's urgent, unexpressed need for ribs.

"I'll tell you what I think the success of ribs are. First of all they're extremely tasty. They're very, very easy to eat. And they're not that expensive. It gives families a chance to dine together, to bring the kids with them, because kids like to eat with their fingers. And it also brings people together, it's a common denominator — everybody's back to basics, eating with their fingers again. So consequently it's nothing to see the biggest star in the world sitting next to a saloon keeper or a truck driver. They sit next to each other and they're both on common ground with sauce dribbling from their chins, greasy fingers and barbecue sauce all over them-

Even the ladies of Beverly Hills, who spend bours composing their faces, enjoy destroying their lip gloss at Romas. "Everybody predicted we would close in a month because people in Beverly Hills would never stand on line, people in Beverly Hills would never eat with their fingers, people in Beverly Hills would never eat with paper napkins. Well, it wasn't two or three weeks before they were standing on line, eating with their fingers and using paper napkins." Laurence Olivier, says Roma, once waited on line for 45 minutes.

"But you know something, he didn't care, he loves the restaurant so much. And they eat just like we do, just because they're celebrities doesn't mean anything. It's nothing for half the room to be filled with celebrities, it's nothing for Sinatra to come in at 2 o'clock in the morning in New York." Roma (his name is an abbreviation of his mother's maiden name, Romano) left school after the seventh grade and earned 10 cents a

When he was 13 and a street kid, Gimbel's department store, whose employees were on strike, came over to Brooklyn in search of scab labor. "They wanted to know if I wanted a job. Of course I wanted a job. Everybody wanted a job in the Depression."

He spent his first morning as a tie salesman and didn't like it. The afternoon was better: He reorganized the pushcart delivery system in the bargain basement. On the third day he found his vocation - the footsore director of the employees' canteen asked him to find help. "She asked me to bring in other fellers — she didn't call me a kid — and I brought in 15 boys from my neighborhood, and we took over feeding 1,500 people in two and a half hours." The pay was 7 cents an nour, and he was infilled.

"My family tree is not restaurant orientated," he says, looking back. "I'm the first one in the restaurant business. I'm the first success. So I got a little lucky, the Guy Upstairs was looking at me."

After serving on a minesweeper in World War II, he ran the Playboy Club restaurants. He has also dabbled unsuccessfully in classic Italian cuisine; the word "gourmet" makes him hyperventilate.

"The labor cost was unbelievable, and the price is usually so high that the least thing wrong is reason for a complaint. It's too hot, it's too cold, there's not enough, there's too much, it's cooked too long, it isn't cooked enough. Another thing I believe, the everyday restaurant person doesn't complain like the so-called gourmet person who wants to impress everybody that he or she knows what it's about so they keep voicing opin-ions. The everyday public — they walk in and if you treat them nice, they're happy to be there. They're not out to impress anybody, especially in a rib jernt."

Roma describes his restaurants as "a kind of fast-food operation with a piano bar, cocktail lounge and dining room setting." He uses waitresses rather than waiters because he thinks they are more housewifely day in his first job on a peddler's truck. and less likely to be in thrall to bookies, loan sharks and extramarital complications, and he dresses them in miniskirts with lace panties. But the effect is decorous, and the nightly turnover is terrific.

"Now this is gonna shock you," Tony Roma says. "I believe in London we will turn over each table six times at dinner, 1 wouldn't be surprised if we do seven or eight." Using one table so many times is accomplished by high-speed service and by the fact that Roma does not serve soups. appetizers or desserts.

În addition to ribs, he does serve chicken, steak, a plat du jour, his famous loaf of onion rings and a great deal of booze, including a coffee called Cappuccino l'Amour, which is laced with five liqueurs.

ve exotic drinks. When you're into meat-eating you're not really into women, so we try to gear things to women, like our big salad. A lot of our food is geared so that the women come in with children - it's nothing for 3 or 4 women to come in with 10 or 12 kids." All this and "Bubbles" Rother-mere too.

Part of Roma's success is that he can be all things to all people. If kids are happy in his places, so are drinkers. "All our food is drinking person's food," Roma points out. Even rain is good for business. "Bad weather is good for us because people don't have to dress up to come to our restaurants."

Roma insists that his quality is so high and his prices so low (about $12 a person in the United States, an expected £S to £9 in London, including drinks) that he makes only a profit of pennies on food. The money comes from the huge client turnover, and this is the reason that no desserts and exotic, rather than ordinary, coffee are featured.

"If they sat around a piece of apple pie or had 14 cups of coffee, we'd never turn over a table." Roma's waitresses are expert at clearing the table the moment a customer has given his chin a last wipe.

"That's the only thing that keeps them from sitting two hours after they've finished dinner. It's hard sitting at an empty table." Roma savs.

For Billy Boy, It's Fun Again

by Carol Mann

ARIS - A lilac room, as quiet as dawn. Sculptural white lamp, al-mond-green cabinet (stark, 1920s) encasing row upon row of costume jewelry, placed in immutable order, like relics in a shrine. Billy Boy, bleached blond and pearls, sits at the edge of his chair, legs tightly knotted, sedately devouring chocolates and pretzels.

A photograph of Elsa Schiaparelli, the designer who translated Surrealism into elegance, coolly surveys the scene: an icon. There is no one Billy venerates more.

At 24, Billy Boy has recently retired from his fashion studio, Surreal Couture, on Park Avenue in New York, after a career that began in his adolescence. Exhausted by the purely business demands on his time and falents, he has come to live in Paris where he wants to work in the traditional haute couture manner only - for a few clients who vie for his exclusive designs.

get and he wants to devote his energies to the rital love of his life: the study of Parisian, principally pre-war, haute couture - examples of which he has collected countless thousands, wearing some occasionally, often lending or donating others to museums, but Thostly storing and cataloging them with the meticulousness of a butterfly collector.

"I was born somewhere east of Nantucket and south of Poughkeepsie," he reminisces in geographical impossibility. "My mother is a professional gambler, travels anywhere they have a casino; my father is a cowboy

Billy prefers to shroud his family. Raising a carefully painted eyebrow, he admits they gave him the non-inconsiderable means to roam the world and amass his collection of haute couture clothes and accessories.

"When I was 12, my parents sent me on a world tour. I had already decided that I was interested in the arts and had started collecting just about anything that would interest me: different textiles, clothing, beads, jewels, paintings, furniture -- especially mad-looking things - even stuffed yaks or broken bits of pottery. Later on, I saw that they were all surrealistically inspired. And as for the clothes, I realized that I had accumulated all manner of wonderful baute couture -Poiret, Vionnet, Balenciaga and others - without knowing what they were."

They were to determine his course. He decided on the study and the designing of clothing, carefully made and exclusive in the manner of Chanci or Schiaparelli, and like them, expressing avant-garde aspects of contemporary culture. He learned his trade by studying the finest examples he could lay his avid hands on. At one time he had a miniature collection of antique haute conture dresses (little Poirets, Lanvins, Chanels) for his favorite doll. He owns hundreds of dolls but is a devoted fan of Barbie. His own clothes were distinctive for their humor and sophistication, a principle hor-rowed from Schiaparelli, who he believes is his spiritual guide and mentor, Billy Boy has assembled no fewer than 2,500 examples of her output, ranging from hats and jewelry designed for her by Dali or Cocteau to eve-and will travel anywhere they will have a ning dresses to the first "Shocking" perfume bottles (designed by Leonor Fini but inspired by Mae West). He will be lending some 200 pieces from his collection to the Schiaparelli retrospective opening in Paris

> "I feel close to Schiaparelli in a very per sonal way, which is why I collect her work: I feel her spiritual presence is in all the things she designed. Each time I am feeling low, she gives me signs, and for no reason whatso-ever, I feel compelled to rush to a flea market or an out-of-the-way thrift shop, and I know I will find something of hers - which usually do.'

Success came like a whirlwind: He started by selling to friends and accepting individual commissions. Soon fashionable stores were making what then seemed to be irresistible offers; he showed at Henri Bendel, Victoria Falls, Artwear, Fiorucci and Riding High among others. The Metropolitan Museum of Art purchased such examples of his work as his "love-note" coat and a crab-claw brooch.

All too fast. "It all became too big for me. and I ended up pumping out clothes for distribution all over the country. I was making a lot of money but that just isn't important to me. It distracted me from what I was really interested in. I feel that haute couture is very sacred, something I really respect and want to do. I have no desire to make basic garments for the person in the street. That's left to hundreds of other designers."

Billy Boy wiggles his shoulders at full speed, slapping the air with his long hands (black nail polish, hangles, no rings) as he expounds with vehemence on the pitfalls of the fashion trade today.

Billy Boy.

His own look is anything but that of the person in the street. "I'm very committed to what I'm doing. It would be silly to make these extreme clothes without engaging my-self in it and promoting this esthetic."

This he does with panache. His favorite cade of Chanel jewelry.

Mexico Plans a Big New Resort

EXICO CITY — The Mexican government has announced plans to turn a remote stretch of Pacific coastline into a resort it says will "rival Acapulco and Cancun," and eventually be able to serve 875,000

The tourism secretary, Antonio Enriquez Savignac, disclosed the development plan during a tour of Oaxaca state, where the resort would be built. The new resort, to be built on the Bay of Huatulco near Puerto Angel, will "rival Acapulco and Cancun," according to the government.

Enriquez Savignac said the Bay of Huatuko has a tropical climate similar to Acapulco's and 10 miles (16 kilometers) of white-sand beaches. Acapulco, which is about 250 miles north of the proposed resort, has long been a Pacific coast favorite for tourists. Cancun, once a village of 117 people on the Caribbean, is now a resort of

After the oil industry, tourism is Mexico's biggest source of the dollars it needs to pay off its $87-billion foreign debt. The resort project is to involve an initial investment of $6.7 million for roads, utilities and other necessities. Plans call for transforming Puerto Angel, a village of a few thousand people, into a city of more than 200,000. An international airport is to be built.

President Miguel de la Madrid, who toured the area with Enriquez

Savignac, said steps will be taken to prevent speculation in land.

Enriquez Savignac compared the project to the development of Cancun, in which he was involved, 10 years ago. The tourism secretary said the area should have 1,300 hotel rooms by 1988 and

The National Tourism Development Fund will be in charge of construction, which will involve 75,000 workers. A total of 50,000 jobs are expected to be provided by the end of the century.

Cancun now has 5,764 hotel rooms, provides 20,000 jobs and received 750,000 visitors in 1983, earning 10 percent of the foreign currency brought into the country by tourists, Enriquez Savignac Cancun was developed after the government did intensive studies to determine what area would be best for development of a profitable

Several times a candidate city, Lausanne has never hosted the Games. Even considered as a permanent site for the Games as far back as 1911, it has instead been home to the International Olympic Committee, which has grown here from a small volunteer team. to an organization of 70 salaried employee who have outgrown their offices in the Chateau de Vidy beside Lake Geneva.

AUSANNE — Olympic host cities —

The International Olympic Committee directs the Olympic movement to ensure the continuity of the Games. As owner of the rights to the Games, the IOC selects the host city, plans committee sessions, arbitrates disputes, oversees finances and churns out reports and publications.

Uptown in Lausanne, the familiar white flag with five rings flies on a building that temporarily shelters the Olympic museum, library and study center. Five athletes work there on an irregular schedule that is "more à la carte than part-time," according to the curator, Jean-François Pahud, who is also coach for the Swiss federation of track and field sports.

Among the athlete workers is Craig Masback, an American who hopes, despite a knee problem to qualify in the selection for the 1.500-meter track event. An earnest Princeton graduate with round-rimmed glasses, Masback explains that one of the aims of the new Olympic center is to pro-mote the ideals of Baron Pierre de Coubertin, the Frenchman who revived the Olympics in the late 19th century. A current exhibition traces the history of the move-

Coubertin, at 25, became fascinated by the ancient Greek sports ideal and impressed by the competitive school sports in England and America. He believed intelligent athletic competition would develop moral and physical qualities in the young. "He had a notion of a triumphant convergence of the mind, body and soul of the Olympic athlete," Mas-

Although he may not have coined the phrase. The important thing in the Olympic Games is not winning but taking part," he adopted it as a philosophy. In more than 27 publications, written over half a century, Coubertin presented a dream of uniting nations by the honest practice of sport. At first the idea met with rebuffs, but he used his connections to invite world personalities to Paris in June 1893. At that meeting, Coubertin, to his admitted surprise, convinced his audience in a unanimous vote to hold modern Olympic Games in Athens. At Easter 1896, hundreds of contestants showed up from 13 countries; the Los Angeles Games will be attended by contestants from 142 countries.

Since, the Games have been celebrated at the end of each four-year Olympiad except during the two World Wars. "The museum is interested in anything that pertains to the Games," says Pahud. Among posters, stamps, torches used to carry the Olympic flame, medals or trophies like the 25-pound gold Viking ship made by Fabergé and do-nated by Czar Nicholas II, are 20 panels illustrating the Games. They record the struggle of such athletes as Emil Zatopek, Paavo Nurmi, Jesse Owens, Bob Beaman, Jean-Claude Killy, Mark Spitz and Peggy Fleming. Under the categories of athletics, gymnastics, combat, nauti-cal and equestrian sports, disciplines come and go. Tug-of-war, tandem cycling and women boxers have disappeared; others, like handicapped skiing this year, have been add-

One recognizes familiar names. A tiny tanned figure in a white beret, pleated skirt and bulky striped blazer dances on dark skating boots: Sonja Henie at age 11. The summer of 1924, a tall swimmer shiwered despite a coverall dark swimsuit: Johnny Weissmuller before he met Jane. The visitor sees again the grace of Nadia Comaneci or Eric Heiden, and is reminded of the lesser-known: a skier, Baroness Schimmelpenninck, or the Ethiopian Abebe Bikila, who twice raced the marathon barefoot and won.

The exhibition honors them all, for it is the athletes who have consistently maintained the Olympic ideal. Roger Bannister, the first, man to break four minutes in the mile race, once said, "We do it because we enjoy it." The records of darker moments are filed

Although political tensions have been the greatest in the last three Olympies, the Games have always been held amid what Baron de Coubertin called "a tangle of dislomatic problems, petty personal latrigues, touchiness to be appeased, wounded pride,

What has stopped the Games is wat. Scheduled for 1916, the sixth Olympics were never held. Coubertin, who was about to retire from the presidency of the Olympic movement, moved to Lausanne, where the city offered the committee a building and a special status. From this neutral haven. Coubertin tried to keep up international contacts. Despite his efforts, Allied countries would not accept a German team at the 1920 Games. Held in war-scarred Antwerp, Belgium, the ceremonies included the terrible roil call of Olympic dead. Nationalism has often flared during the Games, In the Berlin Games of 1936, Leni Riefenstahl's photos of Nazi might were par-ticularly ominous. Other problems recur: amateur status, commercia lism and racism. The president of the IOC, Juan Antonio Samaranch, once a roller-hockey player, is a Spanish diplomat who, like Coubertin, believes in personal contacts. One of his favorite projects is to widen the Olympics to mass sports and culture. Under Samaranch, Olympic patronage has been extended to a local event, the 20-kilometer Lausanne citizen's race, which winds from Lansanne's sports grounds up cobblestoned streets, across bridges and back through town.

The IOC last fall attempted to gather all its activities under à single roof. But an elaborate project for a building on a newly purchased site set off an uproar in Lausanne. The citizens like to describe Lausanne as a country lass, but a cultured one, referring to the city's past as a market town and center of

by Janet Bush

AMELN, West Germany - Poets, historians, even Japanese camera crews have all been drawn to this northwestern town by the tale of the pied piper, Hameln's most-famous son and biggest export, whose 700th anniversary is being celebrated this month. A rat catcher, the pied piper made a brief, extraordinary appearance in the town's his-tory books on June 26, 1284. As described by the brothers Grimm, the fantastic figure in rainbow-colored clothes used a magical pipe to lure rats to their death in a nearby river. When the town balked at paying him for the service, he led a column of 130 singing, dancing children out of Hameln, never to be seen again. Only two children — one mute, the other blind — returned, and neither could tell what really happened.

operas, plays, puppet theater, marches, pol-kas and poems. Current interest appears to be greatest in Japan from where camera crews frequently arrive to film the town. The 700th anniversary has generated un-usually high interest, and Hameln estimates it may double tourism receipts this summer to around 60 million marks ($23 million).

The local museum curator, Norbert Humburg, believes the best theory about the fate of the children is that they were conscripted to colonize Germany's barely populated eastern territories.

Another 18th-century hypothesis holds that the children were led off to holy crusades but never reached their destination. In 1726, townsfolk thought a savage boy found roaming around Hameln was a de-scendant of the children. The boy, called Savage Peter, was later presented to the English court by Jonathan Swift. It was

Robert Browning who Anglicized the town's name to Hamelin in his poem about the pied Ultimately, the varied German legends about the pied piper and the children reflect national ideologies, Humburg said. In Eastern European versions, the chil-dren simply die. Communist readers regard the tale as a parable of hopeless attempts to But in the Walt Disney film version, the piper leads the children to a happy land of eternal youth. Is that the American dream? Humburg thinks so. In Japan, the piper appears in an advertisement for a rat poison Townsfolk take the attention in stride. "Well, it's just a story; isn't it?" one hotel manager said. "But we are fully booked every summer.

ASTROLOGERS

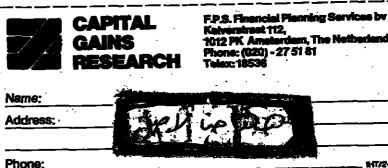

Although "charts" can be effective tools in divining the stock market, the majority of technicians are nothing more than odija-board astrologers, sniffing conclusions from arcane "signals". In the subtimer of 1982, when the DOW was wilting under 800, C.G.R. defied bearies chartists, predicting that the "DJI will touch 1,000 BEFORE HITTING 759". Our accuracy shattered chartists; approximately 85% of the equities we recommended since that date advanced, some escalating over 500%. An historian can compare the influence of "chartists" to estrologers. Last year. A Media dispatch the influence of "chartists" to astrologers. Just as investors were from out of the market by bearish chartists, Nepalese couples were coerced out of the flow of life by astrologers citing the "CHHAYAMAS", the "Lost Month". Nepal functions day by day with the aid of astrologers. The coronation of a Nepalese King depends upon the consent of Royal Astrologers. Granville was neither unique, nor alone, in missing the upsurge. In our opinion, the DOW WILL VAULT OVER 1500, despite downside, temporary, spasms. Perhaps bearish chartists should abandon the Street and become novitiate Star-Gazers; it would save their groupies from suffocating in the quicksand of despair, freeing them to cash in as BULLS decimate SEARS. Our forthcoming letter focuses upon shares under massive accumulation, not by astrologers, but by "Power Elitists", those who capitalize upon the manic-depressive behavior of investors. In addition, C.G.R. highlights two emerging equities with the potential to escalate to prominence, generating geometrically progressing gains.

Video Cameras Promise To Aid Home-Movie Makers Copper ROLOGERS

By STUART DIAMOND

New York Times Service

To a generation of home-movie makers, the term "eight millimeter" means floodlights, projectors and a five-day wait for costly developing. In the next few months, however, eight millimeter will come to mean something however, eight millimeter will come to mean something of come at that can photograph in a dimly lit room for instant viewing — with development costs a -fraction of what they now are.

When added to other recent advances in video cameras that use traditional video recorders, the new eight-millimeter video cameras, which weigh less than six pounds (2.7 kilograms), promise to create a major new business. These cameras will allow people to edit, make copies, crase and devise full-length amateur movies, edit, make copies, erase and devise full-length amateur movies, using a television as the projection screen. The cost of purchasing and developing the film (actually, tape) for some of the new cameras is expected to come to about $2 for an hour of film. The hour. The new tape can be captioned, timed, instantly replayed.

The cameras can zoom in on a football tackle at midfield or pan to the entire stadium.

Polaroid, Eastman Kodak, General Electric and RCA are among the companies that have displayed their new eight-millimeter video cameras, although GE has postponed introduction because of technical problems, and RCA has not announced an introduction date. Kodak plans to start selling its 5.5-pound unit in September; Polaroid expects to begin marketing a camera in the fourth quarter. Kodak's camera is to list for around $2,000; Polaroid says it will be competitive. The cameras have self-contained recording units that store photographed images on a standard cassette used in a magnetic tape roughly the size of a standard cassette used in a tape recorder. The maximum recording time is 90 minutes and the unit hooks directly into a television set. A separate VCR is not

FPS Financial Planting Sear At the same time, Japanese companies such as Canon, Sony, Panasonic and JVC have developed video cameras that are lighter and more compact than previous models. Those units record onto standard half-inch (1.2-centimeter) tape that can be played in a VHS or Beta recorder attached to a television. Some are self-contained; others require a separate recorder, which can bring the total weight to more than 10 pounds. Many cost about half what the eight-millimeter devices do, and use standard cartridges that fit into the millions of video recorders using half-

But the eight-millimeter system is generally lighter, and can be made even lighter and smaller, since the tape cassette is about a third the size of that for a half-inch video recorder. Technological advances are expected to result in two-hour tapes within two years. The disadvantage is that the eight-millimeter size cannot fit into the machines that use the half-inch tape, on which movies and other events are today recorded. The eight-millimeter images, however, can be transferred onto the half-inch tape for storage. "It's a confusing selection and there's going to be a battle in the next few years," said Eugene G. Glazer, an analyst at Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. "But if you wait around for the next generation products, you will have missed a lot of recording time of your kids growing up." He said he expects the eight-millimeter cameras to eventually dominate the market.

ore important than competition, however, is that the M development of video cameras has reached a breakthrough stage in much the same way that pocket calculators and personal computers did when they became smaller, more reliable and inexpensive enough to be within the reach of millions of consum-

In 1980, only 114,000 video cameras were sold in the United States, according to the Electronic Industries Association. The projections are 650,000 for this year and 750,000 for next year. In three years or so, the price will probably drop to about $600 and the market will be "millions of units a year," Mr. Glazer predict-

Trade Ruling May Lead to Barriers

United Press International WASHINGTON — The U.S. International Trade Commission ruled 5-0 Thursday that rising imports have been a substantial cause of serious injury to the domestic President Ronald Reagan. The most common remedies are tariffs or import quotas.

The case is the fourth considered by the commission out of a recent group of complaints filed under what is called the "escape clause." This is a provision of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the world's main set of trading rules, and also included in U.S. law, allowing countries to take tempoallowing countries to take tempo-found that imports were not such a cause of injury in stainless steel tableware and shoe industries.

The copper industry has asked for quotas limiting copper imports to between 300,000 and 350,000 metric tons a year for five years, compared to the 1983 level of

The industry also proposes a spe-cial subquota for Chile, which supplies 56 percent of U.S. copper imports. Other sources are Canada, supplying 17 percent, and Peru, Zaire and Zambia supplying less. All three of the panel members who spelled out their reasons in detailed statements said there was

The question was why. All said the reason lies in the world copper market, not in the U.S. market. World supply and demand, on which the U.S. market has little effect, have reduced world copper prices from $1.02 a pound in 1980 to 61 cents this week, a price below the U.S. cost of production.

Chicago Business Activity Heats Up

Some See City As Key Finance Center in Future

By Winston Williams New York Times Service CHICAGO - The business scene here has suddenly witnessed an explosion of unusual activity. Between the arrival of Rupert Murdoch at the Chicago Sun-Times in January and the con-tinuing saga of Continental Illi-nois National Bank & Trust Co., a series of mergers, stock transactions and extraordinary exchange trades have helped change the way Chicago thinks of itself.

During the recession, its status as the nation's "second city" was lost to Los Angeles as the Sun Belt and the suburbs continued to drain away population and resources. LaSalle Street, the Chicago equivalent of Wall Street, was in the doldrums. Chicago's chief distinction as insular capital of the nation's industrial and agricultural heartland became a dubious honor.

Regional companies, such as International Harvester, teetered on the edge of insolvency. More plants were abandoned. The term "rust bowl," meaning areas of industrial blight, entered the language. And Midwest farmers, (Continued on Page 13, Col. 3)

Conditions on EDF's Eurocredit Are Seen Setting Low for France

PARIS - Electricité de France set what many bankers believe is a record low Thursday for conditions on a publicly syndicated Eurocre-dit for a French borrower.

Neither commercial bankers nor Finance Ministry officials were willing to declare the terms the lowest ever for a French loan. However, the collective view was that no outstanding operation could be considered cheaper.

Part of the difficulty in deter-ining whether a new low had been set was the difficulty in assessing the actual cost. This is because only a small part of the loan is intended to be drawn. Most of it is meant as a standby loan to serve as a supporting facility for other borrowing operations.

The 10-year loan, fully under written by the lead managers, led for $400 million, but if market recould be increased to a maximum of $600 million.

EDF is committed to draw at least $64 million and some bankers expect that up to $150 million may actually be used.

Senator John Heinz, Republican of Pennsylvania, said: "Last year we imported $38 billion of foreign capital and this year it is estimated to be $80 billion. Isn't there at some point a day of reckoning when na tions say, 'Hey, they've got a $200-billion trade deficit — why should we keep lending them money?"

Mr. Volcker said he agreed the foreign capital could be halted at any time, and that it is necessary to reduce the federal budget deficit to get the U.S. economy in order.

He said the prospect of lower interest rates "would be enormously speeded" if Congress could agree on a deficit-reduction package.

The commitment fee is 10 basis points, or 0.010 percent, to be paid whether or not the loan is drawn. This is a new low, down from 16

The fees that EDF is to pay to draw on the loan are low and designed to stay that way. This is because the variable levels of interhabitual in the Euromarket graduated by maturity.

Board Is Said To Be Against Creusot Move

PARIS - A majority of the board of the holding company controlling Creusot-Loire, which filed for bankruptcy Wednesday, opposed the move, sources close to the company said Thursday.

The sources, who spoke on the condition that they not be identified, said that they had urged their chairman instead to pursue negotiations with the government and banks to save the company. Creusot-Loire is France's largest privately owned engineering and steel

Pursuing a policy of profit-oriented growth, Hypo-Bank strengthened its international business in 1983, especially commercial transactions and fee-related activities. Significant steps were also taken to broaden the Bank's already extensive correspondent banking capabilities.

The London and New York branches again contributed materially to the year's results. In its 12th year of Euromarket activity, the wholly-owned Luxembourg subsidiary, HYPOBÁNK INTERNATIONAL S.A., increased its total assets by 11% to Lfrs. 139 billion and continued to expand its private banking services.

Supported by its own offices at home and abroad, partnership in ABECOR, and a mobile team of banking professionals, Hypo-Bank's service potential spans the globe. U.S. Outlines New Rules for Mergers

WASHINGTON - Attorney General William French Smith outlined new guidelines Thursday under which the market share of imports will be considered when the government decides whether to approve a proposed domestic merger.

Mr. Smith said the guidelines clarify rules issued in 1982 and present a "clearer picture of what the law requires" when the Justice Department reviews whether a proposed merger will be anti-competitive.

"Our aim is less to change our process than to clarify it, to give businessmen the certainty they need to make legally correct and economically beneficial business decisions." Mr. Smith told reporters.

Under the revised guidelines, Mr. Smith said, the department will apply the same market definition principles to foreign competitors that it applies to domestic companies. In interpreting the market share and concentration data, it also will consider trade restraints. Mr. Smith said the revised guidelines are not an outgrowth of a dispute over a merger between LTV Corp. and Republic Steel Corp.

Dispute at Creusot-Loire sources noted that several rescue

But industry and government sources said they did not believe that a compromise agreement would emerge soon. "There may be a lot of brink-manship in all this, but the really difficult question is knowing why Pineau-Valencienne does not want to negotiate a solution," a government official said. The official as well as banking proposals had been made to Mr. Pineau-Valencienne recently. Workers demonstrated at plants in Creusot, in the Burgundy region, Wednesday, and some union leaders called for the nationalization of Creusot-Loire.

However, Henri Krasucki, leader of the Communist-led General Confederation of Labor, ruled out such a move in a radio interview Thursday evening. "It is a matter of money, making the owners of the company pay, and then for the rest, we will see," Mr. Krasucki said, in apparent reference to a government rescue plan for Creusot Loire.

DAWN TO THE WEST: Japanese Literature in the Modern Era

ONALD KEENE, professor of Japanese at Columbia University, is probably the century's leading expert on Japanese literature, as well as its most indefaugable translator. Like a man who knows everything about a subject, he runs the risk in "Dawn to the West" of telling us more than we can use. His two volumes are relentlessly specific, detailing the works of hundreds—perhaps thousands—of writers. In self-defense, the reader wishes that Keene were fonder of generalizations, or pauses for perspective, or breath.

"Dawn to the West" begins in 1868, with the Meiji Restoration, and, with a few exceptions, stops short of all living writers. In poetry before 1868, the dominant forms were the tanka, a poem of five lines and 31 syllables, and the haiku, which has three lines and 17 syllables. These poems were written either in Chinese or in an elegant, archaic Japanese that had not been spoken for hundreds of years.

While they were an integral part of public life, such poems were mostly about nature, the seasons, landscapes, trees, flowers, birds and insects. They expressed what was called "the pity of things" or "a sensitivity to things." The new poets objected that they were inadequate new poets objected that they were inadequate for expressing the complexities of modern life, that they were mere "wisps of incense or shooting stars." They were called feminine or precious and it was argued that modern poems should be written in colloquial Japanese.

A sudden flurry of translations, especially of the French Symbolist poets, stimulated a desire to imitate them. As one Japanese writer: said, "Human life cannot compare to a single ime by Baudelaire." Though the Kabuki the-ater was flourishing and Noh plays were per-formed for the samural and noble classes, Japanese writers soon began to imitate the theater of the absurd, the underground theater and other Western schools. Literary criticism was expressed in the rosso, or dispute, which soon spread through Japan's many literary maga-zines. Naturalism, Romanticism, Marxism and the New Sensationalism were just a few of the schools discussed by the new critics.

and the notion of individualism. Indeed, it novels described in "Dawn to the West" see to consist of little clac. Besides the endless pla of amatory or marical dissension, there was a "I novel," which often masochistically details the author's failings. The "mental attitude as d" resembled a series of notebook entries. the author's aesthetics or the meanderings geance in the late 19th century and one priz winning instance was tried "A Tale of Exer ment." Naturalism, as described by Keen does not seem very natural, for he complain about implantibility, contrivance and coinc dence. Humor was rare, and we wonder wh to make of the statement that "The characteri tic feature of the naturalist novel would be the all characters are projections of the autho hero." One Japanese critic complained the such freezante consisted of simplicity with nothing behind it, of honesty more fitting it an infant and seriousness so primitive as I seem merely animal. Female novelists did no attract wide attention until the 1930s.

There is not much evidence here of the sophisticated Japanese novels that have been admired in the West. Keene conducts us only as far as the brink of the contemporary. Hi immense study is like an introduction to, o background for, the Iapanese literature we are familiar with The lives of Japanese novelist are particularly strange. We read again and again of marital discord, scandal, promiscuity and unexplained suicides.

One gropes for a generalization, or a com-parison, after absorbing so much material. Per-haps it can be said that the writers described by Keene were caught in the throes of theory and change, and that it was in the generations after them that Japanese literature reached its best voice — one that fused the national and the universal, that became not so much self-conscious as conscious of itself.

Leonard's Shadow Cast Over Hearns-Duran Fight

By John Ed Bradley

LAS VEGAS, Nevada - Once, they called him the "Hit Man." They marveled at his ability to keep his opponents off balance with a clean, graceful style and then devastate them with left field blasts of ball Union (UEFA) means Amoros fistic power, and few if any expressed surprise when he won 30 of his first 32 fights by knockout, 21 in three or fewer rounds.

Thomas Hearns, 25, was a hit man, all right. He was fast and furious and final. Before fighting Sugar Ray Leonard on Sept. 16, 1981, he shocked no one by appearing on the cover of Ring magazine dressed like a gangster and wielding a machine gun.

But when Leonard won by a technical knockout in the 14th round, spoiling Hearns' perfect re-cord, the folks in his home town balked and all but demanded he give up his name. "Hit Man," Detroit officials objected, reflected negatively on the Motor City. So he complied. He played their game. Hearns has often expressed fear that his public image was drastically hurt by his loss to Leonard, and that regaining public confidence means a great deal to my ca-reer... People, after fighting Leonard, bad their comments. They said I was once a great knockout fighter and that now I'm a boxer. They say I lost my punch and that I can't knock anybody out. Rangers Defeat Twins On Double by Parrish

ARLINGTON, Texas - Larry Parrish hit a three-run double and Frank Tanana pitched a five-hitter to lead Texas Rangers to a 3-0 victory Wednesday night against the Minnesota Twins.

The victory boosted the Rangers' winning streak to six games — the team's longest since 1979. The shutout, Tanana's first of the year, was the 27th of his career.

BASEBALL ROUNDUP

Tanana (7-6) struck out five and walked two, allowing only four base runners to reach second. Losing pitcher Ken Schrom (0-1) gave up only four hits, but three of them were in the Rangers' threerun sixth. Cartis Wilkerson opened the sixth with a bunt single. After Billy Sample flied out, Mickey Riv-ers doubled Wilkerson to third and Schrom walked Buddy Bell intentionally to load the bases.

Parrish, who had driven in 25 runs in the last 23 games, then doubled to right center, scoring the three runners and give him 41 RBIs route to a 10-5 victory over the for the season.

'Frenzied Piffle' for Mencken

By Ben A. Franklin New York Times Service

B ALTIMORE—They are finally ending a long argument here over H. L. Mencken, the iconoclastic journalist whose slashing cri-tiques of American lables and loibles made him, for much of the first half of the 20th century, the most argued-over, admired and hated private citizen of the United States.

The argument in the Mencken "family" the cluster of scholars, students, journalists and "minor literati," as the master might have called them - people who perpetuate the heir-less Mencken tradition - has been over the disposition of the old man's house. From Henry L. Mencken's death in 1956 until a year ago, the notion of a shrine to "The Sage of Baltimore" seemed out of the question. Such a monument, the more literal Menckenites believed, would be an affront to this almost neurotically private public man. But it was the perseverence of the Mencken

Society, a tiny band of surviving friends and retrospective admirers, that finally converted the neglected Mencken house on Union Square into the expensively restored Mencken Museum that is being opened this week with unabashed ruffles and flourishes. Recently, Mayor William Donald Shaefer turned out himself as a hair-parted-in-themiddle, cigar-chewing Mencken look-alike to award the $300 prize in a citywide Mencken Look-Alike contest, sponsored by publicity people of the Cigar Association of America.

On Friday, the mayor is staging a private, catered "heavy German dinner" in the Mencken house. The guests are to include Paul Shyre, the Broadway actor-director who staged a successful one-man Mencken play, "Blasts & Bravos." But the diners are to be chiefly the toilers in the sacred vineyards who contrived to get the Mencken house under the city's wing, where its museum status was assured by grants totaling $180,000 for restoration, refurnishing and custodial staffing.

Mencken might have been less than san-guine about these festivities. In the sealed instructions he left the obituary writers at his beloved Baltimore Sun, the Menckenesque command was: "Don't overdo it." Observers recalled that the Mencken description of almost any event inviting a publicly worshipful assembly was "frenzied piffle."

So, in 1967, at the death of Mencken's younger brother, August - a lifelong companion, and caretaker after the sage suffered a stroke - the family's classic Baltimore row house was left to the University of Maryland with specific instructions that it not be made

But the die has come uncast. In the house where, at his typewriter before a second-floor window overlooking a lovely park, Mencken minted some of the most ineffably spiteful coinage in the American vocabulary - "the native American Booboisee," for one — the funereal shroud drawn in respectful obedience to the supposed wish of Mencken is famed musical bearfests, which he Mencken was the bane of bombasts and the confoundes of quacks. His newspaper columns, magazine pieces and some 30 books pilloried Prohibitionists, Puritans, presidents, prudes, preachers and patriots as "poltroons" and "poobahs." A radical who hated liberals, he made something of a career of spearing Franklin D. Roosevelt and he prided himself that he never wrote a good word about any living president.

Yet, in the 1920s, Walter Lippman called him "the most powerful personal influence on this whole generation of education people.
A prime mover in the effort to create the museum was Carl Bode, a retired professor at the University of Maryland whose 1969 biography, "Mencken," makes the deepest published penetration of the master's life. On the evidence that Mencken kept and filed copies of almost everything he wrote, "including family recipes," Bode has always believed that Mencken concealed "an enormous secret sense of his posterity."

Posterity will be able to visit the house starting this Saturday, when from 5 to 7 P.M.

called the Saturday Night Club. Mencken, more a music lover than a musician, some-times tickled the ivories in a repertory of Beethoven, Bach, Strauss and W. C. Handy.

Among the opening-weekend events at the house will be the staging at 2 P.M. on Sunday of a short play by two Mencken scholars from Albion College, in Michigan, Russell Aimo and Charles Crupi, "Mencken and Sara." It is based on the happy-tragic five-year marriage of the mentor (he was 50) to a much younger writer, Sara Haardt. In trail health when they met, she died in 1936 and Mencken returned to his brother, August, and to his second-floor study in the three-story house where he lived 68 of his 75 years.

The Union Square house, at 1524 Hollins Street, not far from the center of the city, is to be open to the public Wednesdays through Sundays, from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M. Admission is $1 for adults, 50 cents for children. Nearby are the houses of two other famous sous of Baltimore, Edgar Allan Poe and Babe Ruth, and in a commercial furbelow that would please Mencken's ghost, a saloon, just re-named "Down the Street From Mencken's."

Richards Vaults Again

"pole-vaulting parson," has decided after two Olympic gold medals, seek the presidency of the United States. Richards, 58, who won gold medals for pole vaulting at the 1952 and 1956 Olympic Games, said he made the decision after he was upproached by the Populist Party, which hasn't hed a convention since 1892 "I debated and deu...ed and I decided I had to do it for my country," Richards said. Richards, who now lives on a ranch in Waco, Texas, was a minister and professor of philosophy at La Verne College in Southern California when he leaped into the public eye with an Olympic record vanh at the 1952 games in Helsinki. Following his Olympic victories, he remained in the public eye as a spokesman for Wheaties cereal. Fifteen years ago, he decided he "just didn't want to be known as the Wheaties guy," and has made a living in recent years on the lecture circuit.

Wearing pink lipstick, yellow eye shadow and a green cloak, British rock-star Boy George showed up at Madame Tussand's wax museum in London for the unveiling of his dummy likeness. "It's very good. but I wouldn't buy it," he said.
"That would be too egotistical."
The figure went on public display Thursday, Boy George's 23d birthday, alongside those of such stars as Elvis Presley, David Bowie and John McEnroe. "It would have been quite nice to have been placed next to Princess Margaret in the exhibition," the singer said. The queen's sister was quoted by the British press recently as having described Boy George as "an over-
